

In no time, Santa and the kangaroos were back on the beach. The sea sparkles, Sonar and the dolphins, were waiting to take Santa to all the other hot countries with the children's gifts.

Rudolph and the other reindeer were well rested when Santa returned to the tropical island. He dressed back in his warm suit, for where they were going was much colder.

With one last blow of magic from Sonar's spout leaving a trail of spray high in the sky behind him, he said goodbye to his friends.

Santa, Rudolph and his other reindeer delivered gifts to all the children in Europe, where it often snowed at Christmas.

But that story has already been told...

Every year at the beginning of summer, Sonar the great white whale glides past Australia and New Zealand on his way to the South Pole. If you are very lucky, you just might see him splashing and playing in the warm southern water, ready to help Santa again.
